Latest Updates

- President Donald Trump is now airborne and traveling to Beijing for his May 13–15 state visit to China.
- Chinese authorities have finalized preparations for the summit, including ceremonial events and meetings expected at Beijing's Temple of Heaven.
- Trump is expected to hold high-level talks with Xi Jinping on trade, tariffs, artificial intelligence, semiconductor controls, rare earth exports, Taiwan, Iran, and maritime security.
- Major U.S. business leaders accompanying or linked to the trip include executives from Boeing, Apple, Tesla, Mastercard, BlackRock, and other major corporations.
- Financial markets and global investors are closely monitoring the summit for signs of new trade agreements, tariff relief, or expanded market access.
- Taiwan remains one of the most sensitive agenda items, with U.S. officials emphasizing that there should be no destabilizing change in the Indo-Pacific region.
- The Iran conflict is also expected to be discussed, although Trump has publicly stated that he does not require Xi Jinping's assistance regarding Iran.
- Analysts expect the summit to produce symbolic diplomatic progress and limited commercial agreements, while broader strategic rivalry between the United States and China is expected to continue.
